2011-05717-F	Riley, Randall	-	7/18/2011	-	I am attempting to research the complete photographic history of the atomic bombing mission on the Japanese city of Hiroshima on August 6, 1945. The USAF (then called the Army Air Corps) recognized the importance of the mission, from a historical perspective as well as a military objective, and intended to capture the event with numerous cameras (still and motion picture). I have been unable to find more than about five of his photographs of the mushroom cloud, though it is certain there are more. Through the Freedom of Information Act, I should like to have a complete listing of photographs in your collection related to the atomic explosion, mushroom cloud, etc. I have recently contacted the National Archives and was surprised to learn that they only had two images in their entire collection of the burst itself and the most famous image of the mushroom cloud. Although they are frequently credited as housing the images, I am not having any success in locating these photographs. Do you-- or anyone that you know-- have any of the photographs of the mission being carried out, the burst of the bomb and the cloud that followed?
